Evidence and application

Fictional case: Nia lives alone and meets close friend Sol every Sunday to cook a recipe linked to Nia's late grandmother. A relative in another town calls daily, although their relationship is sometimes tense. When Nia moves, the neighbours recognise Sol as someone to consult about practical help. Limited travel money reduces visits to the relative. Living arrangements, meanings and resources tell different parts of this story.

4 Explain two personal-life ideas in Nia's case. [4]

5 Why do travel costs matter to this account? [2]

6 Explain one strength and one limit of a household count for this case. [3]
