Evidence and application

Fictional comparison: Maya lives with a school-age child after separating from a partner. The other parent shares care from a nearby home, and a relative helps with travel. Maya's employer offers predictable hours. Dev lives with a teenage child after bereavement and has supportive friends, but changing shifts and limited late childcare make work difficult to coordinate. An observer labels both 'unsupported single-parent homes'. The accounts are invented to compare circumstances, not to represent every route or outcome.

4 Explain two mechanisms producing variation in the cases. [4]

5 Why is a household count insufficient to establish isolation? [2]

6 Give a qualified judgement about the observer's claim. [3]
